Key Takeaways:

1. How did Eugene Majied's artwork for Muhammad Speaks challenge mainstream depictions of Black education during the 1960s?

2. In what ways did the Nation of Islam's vision for independent education connect to its broader goals of economic and cultural self-sufficiency?

3. Why do you think the idea of creating a Black-run university was so important to the Nation of Islam's vision for the future?

4. Why did Elijah Muhammad consider it necessary to "re-educate" the Black man so that he could "qualify for his own life," and how was this idea reflected in Majied's drawings in Muhammad Speaks? In your answer, reflect on one specific campaign drawing.

Contextualizing the Work

How does Majied's depiction of education and self-sufficiency in the Education Center Campaign reflect the Nation of Islam's broader mission to build independent Black institutions and promote Elijah Muhammad's philosophy of "Do-For-Self"?
